

LAKE PARRAMATTA RESERVE

The lake was Parramatta's water supply until 1909, and the original function of the reserve was to protect its water quality.

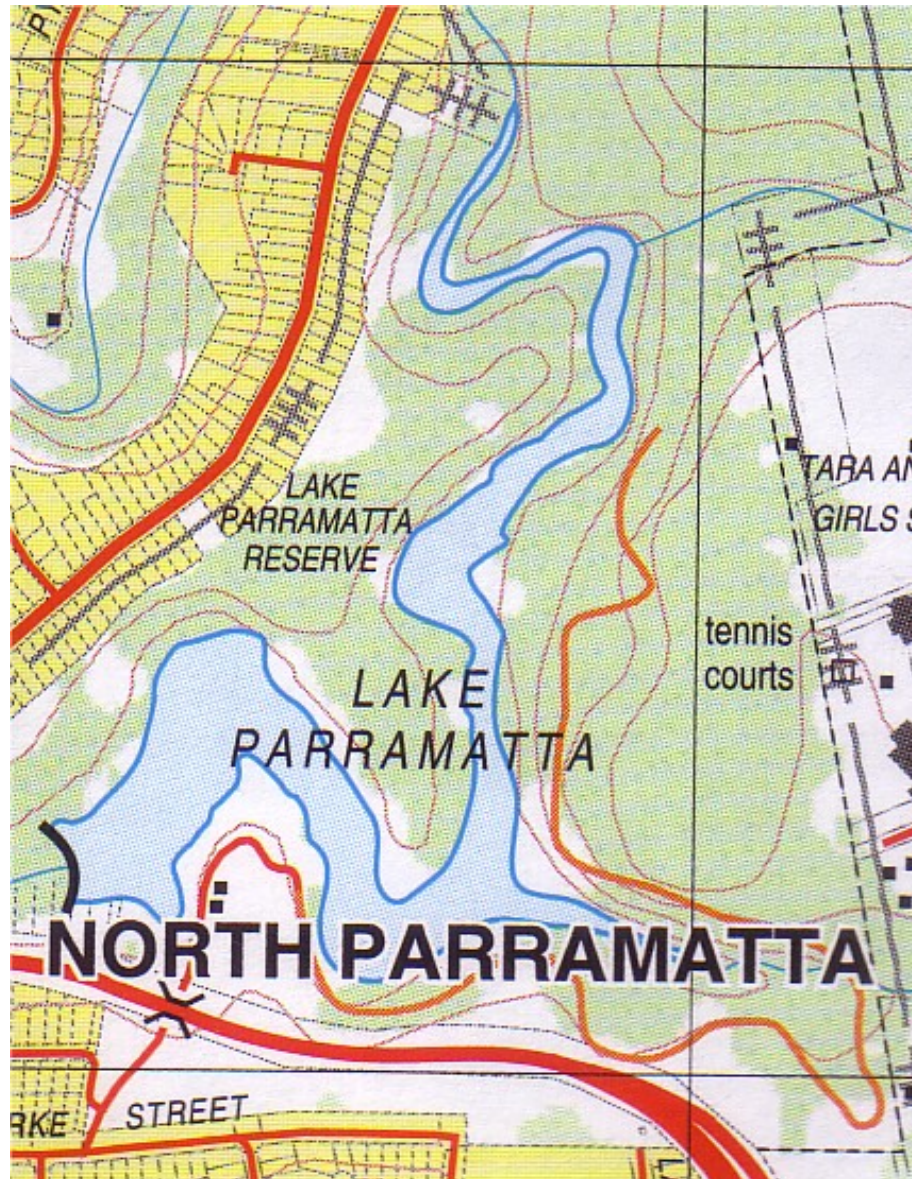

The reserve is now recognised as one of the most significant and beautiful bushland remnants in Western Sydney. Surveys undertaken in 1990 and 2001 identified 67 species of native birds, 12 species of reptile, 5 frog species and 13 native species of mammal, plus several exotic species of birds and mammals, as well as wild flowers, living in the reserve.

Evidence still remains of the regular usage and occupation by the Aboriginal Burramattagal clan within Lake Parramatta Reserve and Hunts Creek. It exists in the form of shelter caves, hand-stencils, stone flaking, tree scars and midden deposits.

NOTE: Stepping stones on some of the bushwalks will be impassable during and immediately after rain.
